

Queensland Police Headquarters

The first Police HQ in Queensland was within an old wooden house on George Street, Brisbane. From 1901 Police Headquarters was moved to the old Church of England's Diocese and Synod Meeting Rooms, corner Elizabeth and George Streets.

The Treasury Building, corner Queen and William Streets, Brisbane was the next location used, from 1933.

In 1956, Headquarters relocated to renovated offices at the Petrie Terrace Depot. The building can still be seen on Petrie Terrace, Brisbane and has been fully restored. It serves as commercial office space and retail outlets.

In 1962 the Queensland Egg Board Building on Makerston Street, North Quay was purchased and converted into Police accommodation, including Headquarters.

In 1976 Forbes House on Makerston Street, was purchased from the Mullaquin Sugar Company, for the purpose of a Police Headquarters.

In 1990, after the demolition of existing Roma Street buildings, including the Red Comb Factory, the current Police HQ building was erected on Roma Street, Brisbane. It was the first custom built HQ for Queensland's Police, and construction of the 52,000 square metre building cost 67 million dollars. The Police Museum currently displays the Architecture's scale model.

Queensland Police Headquarters, 200 Roma Street, Brisbane

Information from the resources of the Queensland Police Museum